"PartnerConnect East represents an ideal opportunity to share knowledge among the private equity community and gain insights into key market trends," comments Williams. "I'm eager to discuss new developments in relation to transparency and reporting, and what this means for fund managers and institutional investors. There are a number of market dynamics at play - from regulatory requirements to operational efficiency and investor relations - that are ushering in the need for new solutions to better manage reporting and transparency."

In connection with this market trend, Altvia is focused on the development of a powerful analytics solution and an enhanced user interface for its cloud-based platform, AIM, which enables fund managers and institutional investors to efficiently manage the increasing volume of data in disparate systems and complexities of relationships in private equity. "Facing a challenging environment, private equity firms are recognizing the competitive advantages to be garnered by turning their data into intelligence that can be leveraged to manage risk and enhance every aspect of the business. And with tools designed for ease-of-use, firms can more readily adopt the technology and processes that enable new insights for better decision making," shares Williams.
